I cannot seem to get answer from the conference provider on why I do not have confirmation of my hotel room at the Venetian. I sent an email to them last week with no reply. I tried calling them twice and left a voicemail once since no one answered.

Has anyone gotten their confirmations?

This is what I found on the FAQ. My understanding after today (the 19th) is when we should start receiving the Hotel confirmation. If I do not see something by Monday I plan on just calling the Hotel to confirm.

An email acknowledgment of your conference registration will be sent to you after you register. You will receive final confirmation, including your hotel reservation, approximately four weeks prior to the conference date.

I did not see confirmation on mine either. I called the reservation number, sure enough, they didn't have record of it. They did not have rooms available for all the nights I need, just M-F....so I'm at the Mirage for those nights & have to book the additional nights separately.

My suggestion: Call the reservation line before there are no rooms left!

I just spoke with a Venetion Hotel reservation clerk and she told me that no reservations have been submitted from Vmworld but today was the cutoff and they will be getting them soon. Once this is done confirmations will go out. This goes inline with what we were told from the start. Hopefully this is the case and I'm not trying to find a Hotel room at the last moment. With all the rooms in Vegas I doubt this would be a problem but I want to stay close to the conference.

Same with me sent several mails, does not seem to be responding at all.

My travel schedule has changed and do not even know the checkin and check out times.

Hope they respond properly.

Reflects very bad on part of the organisers to be like this.

How does it reflect badly if they are doing as they said they would? This is Las Vegas, check in times are VERY flexible. Even in some strange situation that you would not be able to check into the hotel, VMWorld will have a baggage storage area where you can keep your bags if you come directly there from the airport for a nominal fee of a few dollars per bag. I was able to do this for EMC World a few months ago as my flight came in during the early stages of day 2 and I did not want to miss more than I already had to.

Hotel or no hotel?

Relax and enjoy the conference, and Las Vegas. No need to be stressed out about something like this.

Um, Bob, the point of the post is that we don't even know if we EVEN HAVE hotel rooms in the first place. Holding my baggage is the least of my worries.. having a place to stay is.

I had to book my hotel room at the Venetian through the Venetian's website. I couldnt book it when i registered for VM World, and when i call The Venetian (some time before August 15th) i was told that there were no more rooms available at the VMWorld rate.... I have to admit im a little irritated.. But its not my dime.

I ended up just getting my own reservation and not having VMware do it for me. I found that the prices were much cheaper online.

Are you talking about prices being cheaper online for The Venetian? I don't think so. I booked my nights (Sun-Fri) through VMworld website at $219 a night. I am getting in on Saturday and needed to add a night, The Venetian wanted to charge me $399, I got them down to $299. You can easily get hotel cheaper off the strip, but not a The Venetian.

I just called and verified that I DO indeed have a reservation. This is after calling twice before and having them not be able to locate a reservation.

Apparently they were just a little behind on sending the info the hotels. I would suggest everyone call the hotel they expect to have reservations at and check again.

Good luck and see you in Vegas!

I second that - I booked my Venetian room through the VMworld site almost 4 weeks ago and no here it is September 4th and the Venetian has no record of my booking.

All I have is a Cartooney Vmworld Invoice as proof that I have booked my room.

I am getting a bit nervous as well. I really don't want any mix ups. I was told to call the venetian 5 days before my stay - but I feel this is unacceptable. Especially since I will have to somehow link my reservations made directly through the Vmworld site and reservations made on the Venetian site. YUCK.... I can sense a bad taste in my mouth within the next couple weeks..

If anyone is looking for a hotel for not a bad price - and a pretty nice place - New York New York - which I think is within walking distance from what I remember from my last trip to Vegas - is throwing specials on Hotels.com if anyone is interested. I think my room was 160 a night instead of 299 anywhere else on the strip.

The New York New York and the Venetian are on oppsite ends of the strip. It may not "look" far but it's a bit of a hike. 😊 Walking about 35min. However, buses and taxis abound.

MGM Grand has specials for rooms around $100 per night, plus the Las Vegas Monorail is in the building so its a $5 / 5 minute ride to the Venetian.

Just a point of reference:

I'm staying at the Venetian, and booked through VMWorld. When I hadn't heard anything last week, I emailed VMWorld. They said don't panic unless you haven't heard after 9/12. That's a little close for comfort on my end, so I called the Venetian yesterday and all was well. Then, about 20 minutes later, I got a hotel confirmation from VMWorld.

Just FYI.
