Hi Eric,

Watch out for updates before and during the conference. We plan to tweet live , with update about the current events of the conference. If you are following vmworld then you should be getting those updaes on your twitter page, and if you have associated your cell phone with your account , in that case you will receive the updates on your cell phone.

Now you can send tweets directly to vmworld. Here are the steps:

1) Follow VMworld

2) Send direct message to VMworld. Example: D vmworld <message>

This message will send notification to everyone following vmworld on twitter. Note that , twitter has limits to direct messages and API updates, which are:

- 1,000 total updates per day, on any and all devices
- 250 total direct messages per day, on any and devices
- 70 API requests per hour
- Maximum number of follow attempts in a day

While sending tweets to all VMworld twitters with single text message is great, however anyone abusing or misusing will be blocked.

Great idea. However, the URL one sees at twitter / vmworld is incorrect, and sends you to a 404.

Twitter @ VMworld

The correct URL is <http://www.vmworld.com/vmworld/community/conference/twitter>

Looking forward to the conference.

Best,

= Rich

Issues with d message has been resolved. Remember if you have protected your updates, you will not get vmworld updates. To make sure you keep getting vmworld updates, accept "vmworld" request for following you.

Other than that , looking for a few good tweets. It is around twitter question "What you doing?" and adding "What will you be doing at VMworld?"
