

There's something rather strange...

StorMagic Inc 63 posts since

Aug 5, 2008

We're all used to the idea and promise of FREE. However, in the case of software we are often taken on a ride of FREE only to discover that what we get in return is a download copy with an expiration date on it. I for one do not like the idea of downloading a free piece of software only to discover I have 30 days remaining!! Where's the FREE in that??

StorMagic, an iSCSI storage area network (SAN) management company, released a Storage Virtual Appliance that it says can build a virtual SAN in a few minutes. With StorMagic's SvSAN, IT managers can turn unused storage capacity into shared storage for VMware ESX environments for less than $2,000. This is especially useful for features like VMware VMotion, which typically requires a more expensive external SAN. StorMagic's SvSAN capacity starts at 2 TB, and is also designed to work with VMware vCenter. It also lets IT managers manage data stores, the StorMagic iSCSI SAN, and the internal RAID controller from a single interface, according to StorMagic.

StorMagic will be present at Booth #59 to give you your FREE SvSAN! And the best part? This isn't something with a time expiration on it. It's yours for life! For more on StorMagic and the SvSAN, visit <http://www.stormagic.com/>